New F&O inclusions were waiting in the wings, decision based on algorithm: NSE's Ashish Chauhan

NEW DELHI: Speaking at CNBC-TV18's Global Leadership Summit on November 14, Chauhan the names were included after these stocks became more liquid in terms of trading volumes, and large enough for them to enter the derivative segment. NSE MD and CEO Ashish Chauhan said the 45 new inclusions in the F&O segment was a decision based on algorithm, and that many of these names were waiting in the wings for a while. Speaking at CNBC-TV18's Global Leadership Summit on November 14, Chauhan the names were included after these stocks became more liquid in terms of trading volumes, and large enough for them to enter the derivative segment. The National Stock Exchange's circular said details regarding the lot size, quantity limits etc for these securities will issued on November 28. peak in February this year, the overall options trading had reached $6 trillion in notional value. Responding to this development, Ashish Chauhan recalled that when NSE had started, it used to handle 10,000 trades a day, which has now swelled to 30 crore trades, so a mild scale down is not a concern. "Even if one comes down a little, it is several thousand times larger," he said. Market participants have been voicing concern that such a development may impact the revenue of the stock exchanges, going forward. Chauhan added that the intention of the regulator here is to protect to common investor. "Whenever regulators have tightened regulation, markets have become safer, and participants have come," he said. Chauhan said the regulator has the benefit of receiving signals from all sides of the market, not just from few participants. "As regulators, we get a lot of signal from all corners, while (market) participants only see their side of the signals," seeing the micro as well as the macro picture. "Never second guess the regulator on regulatory tightness." "I have seen both sides, being the regulated and also the regulator. For me, when markets have to be protected, if trust is not there and people are losing money, then Sebi has to take notice, and no one should have an argument with Sebi on that," Chauhan added.

Managing student loans and living expenses: Essential tips for Indian students abroad

Our Correspondent
info@impressivetimes.com

NEW DELHI: Studying abroad can be a rewarding experience, but it often comes with significant financial responsibilities. Many Indian students rely on student loans, making it essential to manage funds wisely while balancing living costs. Here are some practical strategies to help Indian students abroad manage both student loans and daily expenses effectively. Before moving abroad, research the cost of living in your destination city. Factor in essentials like rent, utilities, food, transport, health insurance, and other necessary expenses. Then, compare this with your available income, including loans, any part-time job earnings, and funds from family. Creating a clear budget helps you understand your spending capacity and ensures you stay on top of expenses. Tip: Use budgeting apps to track expenses, especially if you're managing multiple currencies. Although some student loans allow for deferred payments while studying, consider making small payments if possible.

Paying even a small amount monthly can reduce overall interest and help you develop a habit of loan repayment. If your loan requires interest payments while studying, prioritize setting aside funds for this purpose. Tip: Use EMI calculators or financial planning tools to project how much your monthly payments will be post-graduation. This will give you a realistic view of future financial obligations. 3. Find affordable housing options. Housing is usually the largest expense for students abroad. Opt for affordable accommodation like shared apartments or student housing, which are typically cheaper than solo rentals. Living near public transport hubs can also help reduce commuting costs. Tip: University dorms may be cost-effective, especially for first-year students. Many universities abroad also provide resources to help students find housing within budget. While it's tempting to dine out and try new foods, regularly eating out can strain your budget. Cooking at home is often more affordable and can help you make healthier food choices. Consider preparing meals in batches, which can save both time and money. Tip: Look for Indian grocery stores or bulk grocery stores like Costco to stock up on ingredients that can be used in multiple meals. Many Indian communities abroad offer resources on where to find affordable, familiar ingredients. 5. Seek part-time work opportunities. Most student visas allow for part-time work, typically up to 20 hours per week. Look for on-campus jobs, teaching assistant positions, or work-study programs, as these are often designed with students' schedules in mind. Part-time work can help cover daily expenses and even reduce the amount you need to borrow. Tip: Check local regulations to ensure your work is within visa restrictions. Working on campus or through official university job boards is usually the safest option.
